Agenda Item 3

Firstly I submit as attachments the very necessary background papers to my question :-

- (a) My 'Postbag' Letter sent to nearly all Somerset Press and Media
- (b) My Humanists UK Latest Anti-Faith Schools Report (I am a longstanding active member)

MY QUESTION TO NEW 2023 SACRE :-

With our new Somerset Council, much now controlled by progressive thinking Liberal Democrats and other 'progressives', surely now is the time to make as much as possible, and campaign for, serious reform in schools so-called religious education according and in line with very serious social and political developments over past decades in the behaviour of residents across society as described in the attached documents.

Please could SACRE now produce a Special RE Reform Report with its 'Proposals for Change' before its next meeting with its 'Reform Action Plans 2024' clearly set out for consultation and discussion ?

Signed: Alan Debenham 18/09/23

This year's highly reputable annual "British Social Attitudes Survey" continues to show the huge generational surge in the number of non-religious people. The overall figure of 53% of the UK population now declares itself as having no religion : the highest level to date, but no more than continuing past years' trend of over 50% – that is, a distinct majority of non-religious people. Even more noted is the latest 18 to 24 year olds declaration of 68% having no religion, a generational issue now firmly established.

Obviously In contrast, the number of people in the UK with definite religion again is declining overall, with 12% identified as Anglican, 7% as Catholic, 18% as other Christian, and 9% as 'others'- including Judaism, Islam and Sikhism. All this again shows secularisation in the UK continues unabated. Surely it's time to end the crusty British establishment's still allocating special privileges to the Anglican church (e.g. charitable tax relief, BBC publicity provision, doctrinal role in state-run primary schools, places in parliament's upper house, local government's educational role, etc) ?.Disestablishment of government from any fixed so-called 'faith' religion is now a must for modern democracy, plus no longer the monarch being 'the defender of the faith'.

As a member of Humanists UK this survey is welcome annual news, now with the same hard-hitting outcome for the fourth year running. Sadly in class-ridden Britain, property, money, and religion, still are firmly controlled by top-tier very rich establishment addicts. Enacting of the big social changes urged by these clear survey results will never happen unless led by popular revolt and politicians devoted to real 'one nation' democracy, not Tory Party capitalist fantasy.

I reckon there's enough of us now in 2021/22, including younger generation masses, to rise-up and enforce change with real religion becoming philosophy of life on this planet and its future sustenance, not ancient scripture-based mythology relying on cultural and social indoctrination. Certainly, if via Extinction Rebellion we plan to survive the enormity of our current climate and environment emergencies, worship of 'mother nature' and rich biodiversity must replace personalised dead gurus,'born in the image' of human male omnipotence. Modern scientific knowledge and David Attenborough's urgent call for survival environmentalism well prove this point, much discounting PM Johnson's oven-ready deal as the 'green wash' the latest Climate Change Committee's report says it is. (See CCC-Joint Recommendations-2021-Parliament Report).

Yours in Religious and Extinction Rebellion,

Alan Debenham

For decades the evidence has long made it undeniably clear that faith schools are one of the biggest drivers of racial, economic, and religious divides in our society. Not only that, but they are able to indoctrinate children – and the law actively encourages it.

That's why it was disappointing to hear Labour leader Keir Starmer promise Jewish leaders this week he would not 'tinker' with faith schools in any way, and a future government he led would be 'even more supportive of faith schools' than recent governments led by David Cameron, Theresa May, Boris Johnson, Liz Truss, and Rishi Sunak. It goes without saying that recent Conservative governments have been among the most dogmatically pro-faith school of any in British history, so this is a deeply worrying vow! This uncritical support concerns us as it fails to take into account the vast weight of evidence of harm. We have written to him and the Shadow Secretary of State for Education to bring much needed awareness of the systemic problems concerning faith schools. We need reform. The status quo is broken. Like scandals over concrete in schools, this is another where doing nothing will only store up problems for the future!

Our state school system is a global anomaly. Over one third of all state schools in England are run by religious organisations, despite the fact England and Wales are two of the least religious nations on Earth. No other sovereign nation has a collective worship law like ours, either, which requires all schools of no religious character to hold 'daily acts of Christian worship'. And out of the 38 countries belonging to the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development, only the UK, Estonia, Israel, and Ireland permit state schools to select pupils on a religious basis. It's unthinkable everywhere else!

The evidence is clear and unarguable: faith schools fracture our societies and discriminate in ways that are unacceptable in any other context. We don't think it's sensible to promise future government will simply exempt them from any and all future reforms of education. Realistic solutions are needed from all politicians and parties. The UN Committee on the Rights of the Child recently slammed the UK for its approach to religion in schools. And rightly so. It is woefully out of step with international standards and commitments to freedom of religion or belief. With the changing demographics of over half the population now having no religion – this is even higher for young people and must not be ignored.

Schools are supposed to broaden young minds, teach critical thinking, and encourage wide learning about the world around us. But sadly, a third of tax-funded schools in the UK are 'schools with a religious character', permitted to evangelise to children from all backgrounds.

One of our most important campaigns is for an end to religious discrimination in schools – full stop. But one thing we encounter increasingly often is that the public are not informed about faith schools, how they operate, and what they're legally allowed to do. So, we're getting that information out there in more hands – with your help. Here are six facts about faith schools:

1) Most faith schools can select up to 100% of pupils based on religion

When oversubscribed, the majority of state faith schools are legally permitted to decline admission to children whose families are not of the faith of the school. That can mean requiring baptism, regular worship attendance, and more besides. Consequently, this leads to local parents being deprived of spots at their nearby school in favour of parents from distant areas. There is no way around it – this is religious discrimination.

2) Some faith schools use ‘faith school points’

This is granted by local churches and based on how much parents engage in ‘religious activities’. As well as attending services and baptism, this can mean participating in parent-toddler groups, joining choirs, taking part in nativity plays, and, in some cases, making donations to the religious group (although this last one is already against the law).

3) Faith schools divide communities

When children are selected based on their faith, this causes segregation of communities along religious, racial, and economic lines. Research shows that faith schools tend to admit fewer children from poorer families, instead favouring those from richer backgrounds.

4) Faith schools indoctrinate children – and the law encourages it.

So-called ‘collective worship’ is a legal requirement in all schools, and that requirement is strictly followed in most faith schools. All children are at risk of indoctrination, and any child removed from collective worship at the request of their parents is separated and isolated from their peers, often left with nothing to do. This should not be the case: we help parents to campaign for a better solution of inclusive assemblies. In the 21st century, the choice for parents should not be between religious indoctrination or social alienation.

5) Most faith schools discriminate against vulnerable children

In England, all state-funded schools are required to prioritise care-experienced children. However, because of their religiously selective admissions processes, faith schools are exempt from prioritising all Looked After Children (LAC) and Previously Looked After Children. We think this is a scandal that deserves further scrutiny and publicity.

6) The UK is only one of four countries in the OECD that does this Alongside Estonia, Israel, and Ireland where state-funded schools can select pupils on the basis of religion.
